Why is Emotional Intelligence important?

One: Quality of Life & Professionalism

Many people today experience that stress or anxiety dominate their daily experiences. Frustration and sadness

DorisNLP

Where People are the Heart of the Matter

can easily take over. Limiting or troublesome emotions are hindering our performance, productivity and our life's quality.

Many of our un-reflected or even destructive behaviors seem to be triggered automatically as if "no choice". We then regret what we say or do and have unresourceful interactions, even conflict. How much time, momentum and money, may we lose this way every day? The consequences on our moods, affects on others and on professional performance is tremendous.

Don't we wish to overcome those traps?

Two: Raise your EQ

It is not people with high IQs

(Intellectual Quotient) that are the most successful or the most fulfilled in life. Research today shows that academic brilliance and intellectual intelligence (IQ) are not enough any more to be successful in life. People who are happy and accomplish what they want, and effective leaders who demonstrate outstanding performance and receive high-grade feedback have a high EQ (Emotional Quotient).

Three: Medical Success

Medical research has shown that holding back emotions may be a precursor for many illnesses and addictions. The inability to deal with emotions can have terrible consequences on our stress levels, nervous system, chemical balances and on our sleep. It also more or less directly affects the health of our sensory systems, our heart and our organs. More and more research shows how expressing emotions and feeling “the good” emotions increases overall health.

DorisNLP

Where People are the Heart of the Matter

The world evolves when our consciousness and skill levels evolve.

Emotional Intelligence NLP Practitioners are the conduits for a more happy, productive and peaceful world.
